Ha. Apparently the danger to civilians in Donbas is so great the LNR and DNR recorded evac videos on Wednesday... and then sat on them for two days. 🧐 Definitely seems like a situation that wasn't manipulated at all... 🙃

(sarcasm, clearly.)

I think Vova needs the concept of "negotiation" explained...

John Hudson @John_Hudson
Putin insists Russia will not accept a compromise, calling on the West to "properly accept" his terms. "We are ready to follow the negotiation track, provided that all issues are considered ... without separation from the main Russian proposals."

An official in the self-declared Donetsk "people's republic" sent me several unsolicited propaganda videos of "evacuation" tonight. They're clearly staged, show hardly anyone waiting for buses. Some show students at local school, mother with kids. Sharing only a few screenshots.

Huge shift: In 2015/2016, blackouts Russia's GRU hackers caused in Ukraine took US gov years to attribute publicly. NotPetya, GRU's global cyberattack that massively affected Americans in 2017, took 8 months. Now GRU sneezes and it's called out in days.

Looks like a bigger deal than the car bomb earlier today. Ukrainian intelligence warned earlier that separatists had placed explosive devices around the area for false flag purposes. This playbook is boring and exposed to death in the wider world. Locally still going full-on.

Personally, I don't see Putin deciding to go to war as
(1) a failure of the strategy; in the information realm, it might mean fewer people—and esp leaders—buy into RU's BS
(2) a reason not to have pursued it (what other credible options did we have, and wasn't it worth a shot?)

> Michael Weiss @michaeldweiss
> The strategy of aggressively declassifying and leaking so much of the intel the US had on this was rooted in deterring a war. If one comes to pass, it won't have worked because Putin fundamentally didn't care if we knew what he was up to. This gambit will be studied for years.

I visited Novoluhanske, on the front line of Ukraine's war against Russia-backed separatists. It came under mortar fire today while I was there. Shelling across the line of contact has been more coordinated than in the past 5-6 yrs, commanders told me.

My PT told me that your screen should be arm distance (with a flat palm) in front of your face, and your forearms should be resting at no less than right angle as you type. You could try a lap desk with an external keyboard; she also suggested moving the mouse to a side table.

Waiting for this #Putin speech on DNR/LNR recognition, the big question isn't whether he'll recognize—a foregone conclusion at this point, IMO—but what he'll recognize: up to the current contact line or beyond, into Ukrainian-controlled territory.

Regardless, please remember that EITHER scenario is an attack on Ukrainian sovereignty; the DNR/LNR "governments" are Russian proxies and Russia's recognition of them, just like its annexation of Crimea, S. Ossetia, Abkhazia, Transnistria, should not be tolerated. (2/2)

Key here: Putin's conception of history is the basis for his denial of Ukrainian sovereignty and autonomy. I've said this a dozen times, this man sees Ukrainians as Russian people led astray (by whom, Poland, the West, etc.). This is neo-colonialism in broad daylight.

Literally laughing as I listen to some of these absolutely brazen allegations. The US provided $1M a day to protestors? The people who organized the protests orchestrated real torture?

(Putin says he will punish those who are responsible; much more serious.)

Putin asks if the 'collapse of Ukraine's economy' is the 'pro-Western choice'. Mentions that the elite of Ukraine is 'stealing from the Ukrainian people.'

"there's no judiciary system in Ukraine either"

Putin claims the US Embassy directly controls Ukrainian anti-corruption agency (interesting that this Trumpian narrative reemerges here).

"Ukraine has been reduced to a colony."

So, cut away the absolutely ludicrous, brazen, falsehoods that came one after another in Putin's speech, and this is what we're left with. Russia recognizing part of a sovereign nation as independent..

Not sure about the "buy into it" part. I think most Russians probably support this policy and want their empire back. Opportunists in the "west" will offer the usual sophistries, in bad faith

But is anyone really persuaded by any of it? I don't think so.

There's evidence that today's Security Council meeting in Moscow was pre-recorded, though TV aired it as "live": signs of editing, Igor Krasnov in attendance but not speaking (was he a lone dissenting voice?), & wristwatches indicating that it was taped five hours in advance.

The timing is curious because it means it was assembled and recorded before the LNR and DNR formally appealed to Moscow for recognition, making it the umpteenth proof that the Kremlin's staging all this bullshit.

Onto the failed attempt to make Ukraine and Georgia in 2008. "The Americans were just using them for their anti Russian policy," Putin says

max seddon @maxseddon · 2h
"I've never said this before," Putin says, then reveals he asked Bill Clinton in Moscow in 2000 whether Russia could ever join Nato. Then he starts accusing the US of supporting terrorists in Chechnya and ignoring Russia's interests with Nato expansion and missile defense

14 · 168 · 455

max seddon @maxseddon · 2h
"Okay, you don't want us to be your friend. But why make us an enemy? There's only one answer," Putin says. "They just don't want there to be this big, self sufficient, strong country called Russia. That's where all of American behavior comes from."

19 · 186 · 49_

max seddon @maxseddon · 2h
Obviously I expected Putin to be aggressive and uncompromising, but this is downright scary. This is a war speech

74 · 1 072 · 3 049

max seddon @maxseddon · 2h
"Nato admitting Ukraine and putting its weaponry there is a settled question," he says. "They're looking at a sudden strike against Russia."

27 · 160 · 53_

max seddon @maxseddon · 2h
One reason why the sanctions deterrence hasn't worked: "the west is blackmailing Russia with sanctions, but they will always find an excuse for them and fake it," Putin says

13 · 83 · 415

max seddon @maxseddon · 2h
"Russia has done everything to ensure Ukraine retained its territorial integrity," Putin says, not mentioning that he is personally responsible for it losing about 20% of its territory

11 · 201 · 90_

max seddon @maxseddon · 2h
A minute later, Putin says he will recognize the Donetsk and Lugansk People's Republics immediately and ask the Russian parliament to ratify it as soon as possible

So there you have it

18 · 296 · 754

max seddon @maxseddon · 2h
TV then immediately cuts to Putin in the Kremlin signing decrees doing just that, with the separatist leaders in tow

He's also signing agreements about "friendship and mutual aid" with both republics

22 · 28_ · 703

max seddon @maxseddon · 1h
They cut to the signing ceremony so fast I didn't have time to tweet Putin's final message – that Ukraine was behind the violence in the Donbas and would be held responsible for "ensuing bloodshed."

This is only the beginning. The speech made it clear: war's on the table

7 · 649 · 1 525

max seddon @maxseddon

Putin has ordered Russian troops into Ukraine.

The decrees on recognizing the Donetsk and Luhansk People's Republics order the Russian armed forces to go into separatist territory on peacekeeping missions.

Please, media outlets, I beg of you, only refer to Russian "peacekeepers" in Donbas with quotes; we've seen heavy artillery and other deadly weaponry built up on #Ukraine's border for months. It is extremely unlikely Russian forces abandoned them before crossing.

No Western media organization should refer to Russian peacekeepers in quotes or otherwise. They are a Russian invasion force and nothing less IMO the best way to handle this is to call them Russian military forces in the headline, and fully debunk the "peacekeeper" label in the text. Unfortunately too many media outlets ran with direct translations of Putin's decree- this tweet was directed toward them.

Minsk was a mechanism for Russia to cement its influence over Ukraine by returning the Donbas on its terms — a constitution renegotiated with its proxies and an asymmetric confederal structure with hyper-empowered pro-Russian regions. 2/x

.@ChristopherJM just described the restraint Ukrainian forces are showing- they're under strict orders not to return fire so as not allow any response to be claimed as a "provocation." The reason we're seeing so many falsehoods from Russia is because of Ukrainian restraint.

So to summarize: Biden calls it what it is: a Russian invasion. He says he's going to hit Moscow with sanctions worse than '14. He's taking steps to limit fallout in the West; defending democracy comes at a price. If Russia goes further in Ukraine, more severe sanctions.

Because all Putin's ever needed was a stern talking to!

> During the radio interview, Mr. Trump said he and Mr. Putin discussed a potential invasion of Ukraine when Mr Trump was in the White House. "I knew that he always wanted Ukraine. I used to talk to him about it," Mr Trump said. "I said, 'You can't do it. You're not going to do it.' But I could see that he wanted it. I used to ask him. We used to talk about it at length."

Who needs online trolls when you can stoke armed conflict?

#Ukraine has both presidential & parliamentary elections in 2018. Don't think that wasn't in Russia's calculus before today's escalation.

For Putin, many positives, few negatives, unless the intl community acts.

Data from Facebook's ad library in #Ukraine:
-Poroshenko's Black PR efforts attracted more fans than his positive pages about himself
-His camp spent less money on positive promotion of his brand than black PR against his rivals

So according to this (great) investigation, the dreaded "Poroshenko troll chocolate factory" has actually been a legit PR agency, not a shady structure like Russia's Olgino (questions still need to be asked whether pouring millions into attack ads is legal under campaign law).

In researching my latest on #Ukraine's presidential elections, I found one page that placed 17 ads between the 1st and 2nd round votes. They were taken down, but not before they garnered 6 million impressions & cost page administrators between $7k-$29k. politico.eu/article/facebo …

Worrying reports from Crimea on the entire night shift of Titan chemicals plant in Armyansk evacuated from the facility. This might be a preparation for another staged provocation by Russia. Moscow seems to have no limits in attempts to falsify pretexts for further aggression.

Not that this will be news to any of my followers, but this is absolute horsesh*t. Totally fabricated. Not grounded in reality.

JUST IN: Statement by President Biden on Russia's Unprovoked and Unjustified Attack on Ukraine

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
February 23, 2022

Statement by President Biden on Russia's Unprovoked and Unjustified Attack on Ukraine

The prayers of the entire world are with the people of Ukraine tonight as they suffer an unprovoked and unjustified attack by Russian military forces. President Putin has chosen a premeditated war that will bring a catastrophic loss of life and human suffering. Russia alone is responsible for the death and destruction this attack will bring, and the United States and its Allies and partners will respond in a united and decisive way. The world will hold Russia accountable.

I will be monitoring the situation from the White House this evening and will continue to get regular updates from my national security team. Tomorrow, I will meet with my G7 counterparts in the morning and then speak to the American people to announce the further consequences the United States and our Allies and partners will impose on Russia for this needless act of aggression against Ukraine and global peace and security. We will also coordinate with our NATO Allies to ensure a strong, united response that deters any aggression against the Alliance. Tonight, Jill and I are praying for the brave and proud people of Ukraine.

No consolation for them in it but US/UK intelligence had this one right for months—the build-up, its purpose, the pretexts & full-scale attack. That sadly suggests they may be correct on the rest: Russia's readiness to occupy Ukraine, aim of regime change, kill/capture lists.

> Shashank Joshi @shashj
> Remember: US intel officials had it right on Dec 3rd. To much eye-rolling, they warned @washingtonpost that Russia would gather 100 BTGs & 175,000 personnel. They were right (in fact numbers are higher). They also predicted a "a multi-front offensive". washingtonpost.com/national-secur...

It's noteworthy that Putin drew a parallel Chechnya, Crimea, Syria. Donbas. What can we learn from that?

Crimea was peaceful, but Russia's operations in Chechnya and Syria involved the wholesale destruction of cities, with little or no regard for civilian casualties.

Listening to Putin declaring war on Ukraine was surreal - snarling about 'denazification' and 'genocide' in the Donbas, just after I was woken by a loud thud in Kramatorsk

He was threatening the West vs intervening - 'the consequences will be like nothing you've ever seen'

President Zelenskyy reached out to me tonight and we just finished speaking. I condemned this unprovoked and unjustified attack by Russian military forces. I briefed him on the steps we are taking to rally international condemnation, including tonight at the UN Security Council.

Hey folks, I want to recap a few things on Ukraine:

First, the intelligence community has been very accurate and has given us a lot of insight over the past few months and through this invasion. We'll keep trusting them.

We have broad, bipartisan consensus on countering Russian aggression with severe sanctions. There's also strong international consensus, even beyond NATO. Our allies in all parts of the world are condemning the actions of Putin.

Mark Warner @MarkWarner 10s
The Russian military is attacking targets across Ukraine, suggesting this is a broad invasion. It appears direct attacks on Kyiv are beginning. But they are meeting resistance from the Ukrainian people, including civilians who have been training over the past few weeks.

Mark Warner @MarkWarner 9s
I remain particularly concerned about the reports of cyber attacks and the way the international community could be at risk. There's historical precedent to suggest these could be devastating for individuals, businesses, and entire countries.

Here's what's bonkers about this. Every inch of this conflict has been documented, practically in real time. It is ridiculous to assume that while thousands of citizens and soldiers have documented Russia's troop movements, war crimes by the other side wouldn't be documented.

Am I right that the "drug addict" reference is a dig at Zelensky, who was accused by former president Poroshenko during the 2019 Ukrainian presidential campaign of using drugs? Or what else is Putin referencing with that?

Putin tells Ukrainian soldiers to "take power into your own hands" and not to let "drug addicts and neo nationalists use your families as human shields." Clear that he has lost the plot. And thousands will suffer as a result.

It's simply interesting for folks like us who covered the campaign that a narrative that started with a Ukrainian President made its way to Putin's mouth. Or maybe it started there to begin with.

In addition to throttling Facebook for allowing factual reports on #Russia's war in #Ukraine on its platforms, Russia's federal censor is now threatening to block Russian media that truthfully describe Russian actions as what it is: an unjust, unprovoked, inhumane war.

Just another day in 2022, when your beloved What's App group chats transform into desperate queries and pleas for military-grade vests and helmets. We are not OK.

For those asking how you can stand w/ Ukraine, my dear friend @wiczipedia has been my guide: instagram.com/p/CaaP99BJqon/ …

> Query - our civilians took weapon fir street fights but the problem is that we critically need helmets and vests that cannot be bought in Ukraine. I am asking you to connect me to all possible NGOs, volunteers, or Embassy representatives you could think of to arrange the purchase and delivery of this crucial provision to the border with Ukraine. From there, our volunteers could pick up the equipment and distribute it to the zones in need.

Don't they have a right to defend their country from an unprovoked invasion? And it's not like this weaponry has been supplied in secret. I don't think there's much to "find out." Ukrainians are using weapons provided by allies to defend themselves. The end.

CNN: Google Maps has blocked two features in Ukraine that provide information to users in real time, the company confirmed to reporters on Feb. 27.

The disabled features include Google Maps' live traffic overlay and Live Busyness, a feature that displays how popular a location may be at a given time. Google reportedly made the change in an effort to help keep Ukrainians safe.

You do not have the sole franchise on "friends and colleagues" dying, spending their nights in bomb shelters or worse, EVERY night!
Many people, in every country on Earth are touched by the fight for freedom wherever it is happening!

In this nation there are no chains on speech!

There are people actually making money through fake "fundraisers" for Ukraine and others who are sharing garbage information to increase their social media profiles. I'm not saying that people can't express sympathy- just that we should be wary of those profiting off it.

to their personal benefit, pumping up their credentials and inserting themselves into the story. Everyone's entitled to their opinions, of course, but do beware of people who seem to want to make themselves the main character of this event. They aren't usually adding much. (3/)

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia 10h

A good way to gut check this:

-do they RT others, or is their timeline all them waxing poetic about their brilliant thoughts/summarizing other people's work?

-are they amplifying Ukrainian voices and outlets in addition to western media?

Just be skeptical. (4/)

That's all for now. (5/5)

I wonder if anyone else is feeling conflicted in trying to enjoy themselves now that they have gotten emotionally invested with the people of Ukraine and what they're facing? Some sort of shared guilt for their helplessness? Just a question.

Breaking: Treasury announced that starting today US persons will be prohibited "from engaging in transactions with the Central Bank of the Russian Federation, the National Wealth Fund of the Russian Federation, and the Ministry of Finance of the Russian Federation...

WASHINGTON – Today, the U.S. Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) prohibited United States persons from engaging in transactions with the Central Bank of the Russian Federation, the National Wealth Fund of the Russian Federation, and the Ministry of Finance of the Russian Federation. This action effectively immobilizes any assets of the Central Bank of the Russian Federation held in the United States or by U.S. persons, wherever located.

In addition, as directed by President Biden last week, OFAC sanctioned a key Russian sovereign wealth fund, the Russian Direct Investment Fund (RDIF), with exposure to the United States financial system and its Chief Executive Officer (CEO), Kirill Dmitriev – a known Putin ally. Recently designated Russian President Vladimir Putin and his inner circle of cronies have long relied on RDIF and Dmitriev to raise funds abroad, including in the United States. By further restricting these persons and entities from the U.S. financial system, the United States continues to demonstrate its unwavering commitment to support Ukraine, impose costs on Putin's inner circle or those connected to Putin and his war of choice, and to prevent Putin's regime from raising capital to fund its invasion of Ukraine and other priorities.

The US just unveiled the details of its sanctions against the Central Bank of Russia. Bottom line: This is close to the most ambitious form that this action could take. Here's my initial analysis (🧵):

(1) As I explained on Saturday, the joint statement hinted at limited sanctions against the CBR. Not blocking sanctions (i.e., asset freeze and transaction ban), but something more scalpel-like to prevent the CBR from undermining other sanctions.

> Eddie Fishman @edwardfishman
> The wording suggest a more scalpel-like measure, in which the allies prevent the CBR from deploying reserves to bail out other sanctioned entities. Yes, this would be a big deal. But it would not be as big of a deal as full blocking sanctions on the Central Bank of Russia.

(2) Then, Ursula von der Leyen, European Commission president, dropped a bombshell, saying sanctions would "paralyze the assets of Russia's central bank" & "freeze its transactions." To my ear, this sounded a lot like blocking sanctions—the strongest sanctions tool we have

"Putin embarked on a path aiming to destroy Ukraine. But what he is RT and Sputnik don't have big audiences in Russia; the main state media channels and captured outlets corner that market. RT/Sputnik ban wouldn't make a dent compared to these, and I don't see platforms banning all Russian media that toe the Kremlin line. (1/2)

We are doing a whole lot- exceeding many expectations. We can and will do more. But these visual shows of solidarity are not just important for Ukrainians- they show Putin and the rest of the world where Congress stands: #UnitedWithUkraine

Without being snarky, is this not what the Biden administration is doing?

Blake Masters @bgmasters

What to do? We should supply the Ukrainians as they fight for their country. We should support the Europeans as they get up off their knees. We should sanction Russia so that Putin and his cronies feel the consequences. And we should keep our own military out of this.

Just because we have not seen threats to date doesn't mean we will not see them manifest quickly. Risks may emerge rapidly from a) unintended impacts of cyber attacks within & beyond Ukraine by both state & non-state actors. 2/

Jen Easterly @CISAJen 9s

b) opportunistic targeting of US-based critical infrastructure by criminal ransomware gangs; or c) deliberate targeting by Russian state-sponsored malicious cyber actors in retaliation for actions taken by the US & our Allies to impose costs on Russia. 3/

We strongly encourage everyone to review & implement guidance on cisa.gov/shields-up to ensure security of networks & data, this is about preparation NOT panic (cue @coldplay). For orgs that struggle w/resources, we've compiled a list of FREE tools: go.usa.gov/xtu7b 4/

Speaking as an editor, I thought it was pretty shambolic. They didn't set the context, there was no narrative arc. It was very haphazard. By far the most effective part was when they interviewed residents of the self-proclaimed eastern Ukrainian republics.

Ilya Lozovsky @chbinilya 16s

Some genuinely moving moments there. Mothers talking about their children killed in Ukrainian shelling, etc. They hammered this home again and again: peaceful civilians in Donetsk and Luhansk were being shelled for years. They said 14k civilians had been killed.

Ilya Lozovsky @chbinilya 15s

In this video, at least, this was their main and most convincing argument. Not

More than 1.4M refugees have already arrived in Poland, which is continuing to find new ways to help. The Poles sent a medical train full of doctors to Mostyska, Ukraine, to pick up the wounded and bring them to the Warsaw National Hospital for care.

Very saddened by this news. @madeleine was an inspiration to me as a Seven Sisters grad. I was lucky to work for several years @NDI, the democracy support organization she chaired, where I saw how deeply she cared for #Ukraine and the broader CEE region.

There we go. Russian propaganda is now saying Hunter Biden is the man funding the Ukrainian biolabs.

Sputnik is citing Russia's head of Radiation, Chemical and Biological Defense Troops, so it's the government line.

They're tying up all of the plot points for the season finale.

So glad to see this. Getting credible information about Russia's war of choice out is of paramount importance. twitter.com/sobieraj/statu …

> In the first three weeks after the invasion, page views from Russia to Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty sites skyrocketed to 26 million, more than 50 percent more than an earlier corresponding period. Video views from Russia to their YouTube channels more than tripled to 237 million. And this was happening despite sites being blocked within Russia.

Responding to our report, Kremlin spox Dmitry Peskov said Tuesday he was unaware of cases of missing Ukrainian officials, journalists and activists in Russian-occupied areas of Ukraine. He said he'd not yet read CNN's story, but would get to it, before criticizing it as "biased."

I don't know if I've ever read a more horrific paragraph than these words from a Ukrainian woman who may be the first heard in a war crimes investigation against Russia thetimes.co.uk/article/one-so …

> Natalya called to her son to stay in the boiler room where they had been sheltering from the shelling. "He said 'you'd better shut up or I'll get your child and show him his mother's brains spread around the house'," she recalled, her voice fading for the first time. "He told me to take my clothes off. Then they both raped me one after the other. They didn't care that my son was in the boiler room crying. They told me to go shut him up and come back. All the time they held the gun by my head and taunted me, saying 'how do you think she sucks it? Shall we kill her or keep her alive?'" well we're here to help the Russian speakers and he said 95% of us speak Russian and we're fine. They said they heard that the World War II veterans of the town had been beaten on the patriot day and he said au contraire they're venerated and there's not very many of them left.

It seems these Russian soldiers truly thought that. This entire war is being fought on propaganda - for false pretenses. Its not only Putin who doesn't know what's going on. This mayor, Ivan Fedorov, said the soldiers were completely unprepared and clueless.

Incredible testimony on BFMTV from this mayor of Melitopol who was kidnapped for several days by the Russians. He says they had no idea what's going on. They told him we're here to get the Nazis - he said I've been in this town 30 years and I've never met one…. then they said

Each time Ukraine shows Russian atrocities in our cities, Russia turns around and says we did it to ourselves. Telegram channels repeat it, Twitter cyborgs repeat it, tv presenters repeat it. The propaganda infrastructure spins to justify the crimes. It's so vile to watch.

This @stokel piece on the Instagram DM abuse study from @CCDHate is worth your time.

As I write in #HowToBeAWomanOnline, I've received messages like this myself, which has led to me no longer respondto DMs from people I don't know (on any platform).

inputmag.com/culture/amber- ...

One in seven voice notes — recorded audio messages — sent to the women were abusive. The women combined received 125 sexually explicit images, including 50 dick pics and 75 instances of porn (nine of them deepfakes). Klingler says she downplayed how much abuse she got until the CCDH's statistical analysis of her Instagram DMs showed one in 10 messages she received were sexualized.

A Russian soldier suggested to her the reason for her husband's joint pain: "Do you know that not far from you there's a laboratory where the Americans are making biological substances and injecting your people with them?"

Monday re-post of my @diplocourier #BookReview of @wiczipedia's "How to Be a Woman Online" (@BloomsburyPub, 4/21). A how-to guide for women to navigate online abuse, but a smart, forced reflection on a society that condones such abuse in the first place.

You know how when a writer gets a new book deal, they always share the announcement with the caption "Some personal news"?

Well. Some personal news.

Got the opportunity to speak to @NPRMichel on @npratc about #HowtoBeAWomanOnline, out on Thursday.

We discussed how free speech absolutism might affect online abuse against women.

Just putting this out there: when you talk about brave Ukrainian women defending their country, you really, really don't need to remark on their appearance.

Discourse like this contributes to the normalization of looking at women as objects, which furthers abuse on and offline.

Why are you so eager to dismiss their appearance? Beauty is beauty and asking people to ignore it (especially when it is poking their eyes out) is just incoherent. That doesn't diminish our admiration of their courage, skill, humanity and achievements. It adds to these.

Let's also not forget the original meaning of "bitch" - a female dog, typically used in the context of breeding. Quite different than similar gendered slurs levied at men.

Today on #MarketplaceTech, we talk to author @wiczipedia about how the responsibility for managing online harassment has been put on the victims rather than the platforms. And how preventing online abuse against women requires more than a “block” button: mktplc.org/3jZFIWI

> …We need to talk a lot more about building platforms from the very start with women and marginalized communities in mind. Often we hear about new features on a platform that seem really cool for your average white dude. But, when you think about it from the context of a woman or someone with an intersectional identity, it's very clear that those new affordances on those platforms can be used for harassment or worse.

In fact, I provided study after study- this particular man just doesn't care for qualitative methods. When I told him that I felt the purely quant studies didn't reflect women's experiences, or the fact that we often don't report or downplay harassment, he said "men do this more"

A DM I received today, publication day for #HowtoBeAWomanOnline.

To all the men out there who doubt the severity of online abuse against women, here's one of your own admitting he takes pleasure in exploiting the loopholes on social media platforms to continue his sick games.

> "I was taken aback by the way that men started to use what I then called malign creativity" Ms Jankowicz, have you any idea how pleasurable it is to get around muted words or outright blocks?

A lot of people willed this book into being, but none more so than [illegible], my editor, who read my research and asked "Might there be a book here?"

My initial reaction (6 mos after my first book was published) was to shudder, but eventually we settled

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 27m
on a format that is maximally accessible, usable, and dare I say, was even FUN to write, despite the subject matter. I got flippant comments on my reddit AMA Tuesday night about "capitalizing on anxiety," but no, my dudes, I just like helping other women and making an impact

To all the men out there who doubt the severity of online abuse against women, here's one of your own admitting he takes pleasure in exploiting the loopholes on social media platforms to continue his sick games.

> "I was taken aback by the way that men started to use what I then called malign creativity" Ms Jankowicz, have you any idea how pleasurable it is to get around muted words or outright blocks?

Tweet doing the rounds this morning demeaning a female Member of Congress for having makeup on the inside of her mask clearly illustrates the double standards and endemic misogyny against women in public life, online and off. (1/)

The tweet ignores the fact that it is nearly impossible to avoid getting makeup all over the inside of one's mask, particularly when doing a lot of talking or perspiring. Makeup often stains masks too, so plenty of this "filth," as OP calls it, might be from previous wears (2/)

And then there's the fact that this Member—and any other woman—would likely be lambasted if if she did not wear makeup. So what is a woman's choice here? The outcome is the same: wear mask, be criticized as "filthy," don't wear makeup, be told you are ugly/unprofessional (3/)

Nothing to do with policy positions. Nothing to do with anything of substance. Just ignorance and misogyny on full display. It's not a partisan problem, either; this is something that women in public life (and more generally, women on the internet) have to deal with daily. (5/)

Again, it's a prime example of the norms of how we treat women, online and off. This isn't about political discourse, freedom of speech, or anything remotely defensible. It's just misogyny, plain and simple. And we need to demand better. #HowToBeAWomanOnline (6/6)

Russia's ruling political party in St. Petersburg has launched a Telegram bot to crowdsource the policing of online "false information." In other words, they want Russians to rat out their compatriots. Submitting reports requires people to share their own full names & emails lol.

I wish this taxonomy were not so accurate, and that the denizens that fill it out not so common. But it is, and they are, and @wiczipedia's description, analysis, and recs are spot on. As a man, I particularly try to remember the (absurdly) very different expectations we face. twitter.com/wiczipedia/sta ...

> Women are expected to stoically endure astronomical levels of abuse to simply participate in conversations while navigating a set of social mores and boundaries that simply don't exist for men. When men encounter behavior they don't like online, they curse. They block. They willingly and openly dogpile and troll. And the world thinks them more manly for it. Women, in calling out much worse behavior, are told we are "emotional," "weak," "exaggerating," or "hysterical."

I think you might learn something about the abuse women experience if you read the excerpt, and maybe even the book. Have a nice day.

And they're not on Twitter, but my husband and mom have been my biggest cheerleaders as I embarked on book #2, which honestly is a weird process! So much less excitement and mystery than book #1. But they've reminded me that this work is important & I should feel proud of it. ❤️

And they're not on Twitter, but my husband and mom have been my biggest cheerleaders as I embarked on book #2, which honestly is a weird process! So much less excitement and mystery than book #1! But they've reminded me that this work is important & I should feel proud of it. ❤

And they're not on Twitter, but my husband and mom have been my biggest cheerleaders as I embarked on book #2, which honestly is a weird process! So much less excitement and mystery than book #1. But they've reminded me that this work is important & I should feel proud of it. ❤

And they're not on Twitter, but my husband and mom have been my biggest cheerleaders as I embarked on book #2, which honestly is a weird process! So much less excitement and mystery than book #1. But they've reminded me that this work is important & I should feel proud of it. ❤

And they're not on Twitter, but my husband and mom have been my biggest cheerleaders as I embarked on book #2, which honestly is a weird process! So much less excitement and mystery than book #1. But they've reminded me that this work is important & I should feel proud of it. ❤

And they're not on Twitter, but my husband and mom have been my biggest cheerleaders as I embarked on book #2, which honestly is a weird process! So much less excitement and mystery than book #1. But they've reminded me that this work is important & I should feel proud of it. ❤️

After mostly staying off Twitter over Christmas, finally read this @washingtonpost piece on Russia's influence ops and the US twiddling our thumbs. Reactions:

I agree that the use of "Alice Donovan" - a "journalist" with few followers and little influence- as the framing for the story is not helpful or illuminating, rather a bit alarmist.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczpedia · 27 Dec 2017

The US reaction being mired in bureaucratic hurdles is disheartening, but not surprising. We should have done more, but for too long we weren't convinced of the threat.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczpedia · 27 Dec 2017

But what I want to see more of in this story- especially since it uses Donovan as a frame- is what the government should be doing to defend against Russian influence ops within our own borders.

IC has a high degree of confidence that the Kremlin used proxies to push influence narratives, including misleading or unsubstantiated claims about President Biden, to US media, officials, and influencers, some close to President Trump.

A clear nod to the alleged Hunter laptop.

Woof. Where to start.

First. Twitter needs to figure out where controversy ends and hate speech begins. It needs to be clearly delineated, communicated and enforced. They have the power to set their own rules about this.

> Twitter Safety @TwitterSafety · Aug 7, 2018
> We welcome everyone to express themselves on our service. Sometimes these expressions may be offensive, controversial, and/or bigoted. We prohibit targeted behavior that harasses, threatens, or uses fear to silence others and take action when they violate our policies.

Replying to @wiczipedia
Second, Twitter should know that the subtweet exists. It's possible to target, intimidate, or silence a person without expressly mentioning them. I've experienced this. ¯_(ツ)_/¯

1 · 1 · 10

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Aug 8, 2018
Third, I am all for serving civil discourse, but it needs to be just that: civil. People who are engaging in hate speech, defamation, etc., have no place in a civil debate and no place here.

1 · 2 · 8

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Aug 8, 2018
Finally, we often talk about "preserving the public square" when we discuss speech issues on social platforms. But the truth is that no one would have the balls to say half of what they say on Twitter to the face of those they attack.

1 · 4 · 12

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Aug 8, 2018
(Aside: It's true that social media has given voice to the voiceless in our society; more minorities and women have a platform because of it. That paradigm is worth preserving. But we also receive the brunt of the abuse.)

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Aug 8, 2018
No, Twitter should not fact check every tweet. But when well-known, easily researched cases like that of Alex Jones and infowars arise, in which parents whose children were murdered in cold blood are not only targeted, but prevented from visiting their children's graves

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Aug 8, 2018
...they ought to be addressed as the targeted harassment they are.

Here's just one tweet targeting Sandy Hook parents as "known liars." But they're not @ replied, so it's not harassment? Come on.

twitter.com/RealAlexJones...

This Tweet is unavailable.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Aug 8, 2018
I'm not saying this is an easy call, nor one that requires no investment. But if democracy and civil discourse is truly at the heart of what we're talking about, we can't keep shrugging these hard questions off.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Aug 8, 2018
TL;DR Skeptical dog is skeptical of this decision, Twitter.

I have to agree with this.

Do I doubt Russian intel services capitalized on Seth Rich's murder and the fertile ground for conspiracies that surrounded it? Of course not. But they also weren't the only - or even the most influential actor sharing them.

Fair point, but a lot of the comparisons I've seen are being drawn to either US interference in elections during the Cold War to "contain communism", or its role in Yeltsin's reelection. I don't think the comparisons are intended to be exact, rather to cast aspersions on purity

Because this isn't just about pension reform! It's a rejection of rampant corruption and the fact that so many in Russia (particularly pensioners) live so poorly while others struggle to make ends meet.

Another point of disagreement was over WhatsApp's encryption. In 2016, WhatsApp added end-to-end encryption, a security feature that scrambles people's messages so that outsiders, including WhatsApp's owners, can't read them. Facebook executives wanted to make it easier for businesses to use its tools, and WhatsApp executives believed that doing so would require some weakening of its encryption.

Ultimately, Koum was worn down by the differences in approach, the people said. Other WhatsApp employees are demoralized and plan to to leave in November, four years and a month after the Facebook acquisition, when they are allowed to exercise all their stock options under the terms of the acquisition of Facebook, according to the people.

One of the biggest challenges facing the Wilson transatlantic community is the continued threat of Russian disinformation. Many in the Russia watcher community are glad the Global Engagement Center has been funded, but when will fighting Russian disinformation be a priority of President Trump's, and how can our European allies take the administration's commitment seriously when the President

The trust gap is of our own making, utilized by forces within and outside of the United States to further polarize society

Sergei S. @vsyo · 22 Jan 2018

The outsiders can do nothing to the US, unless they use an A-bomb. The trust erosion is due to the fallout from an anti-Trump war that has been waged by the US elites and their institutions (incl., media).

Hi Paul! This is a question I get a lot and it's a fair one. But post WWII and current situation are separated by very different circumstances, and more importantly, values, as John pointed out on air. Russia is meddling to cause chaos, not stand up for a greater ideal.

As you continue your work at delegitimization of the US President (and US democratic process) through good old Russia mongering, may I suggest this great read from BBC?

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 @wiczipedia · 8 Dec 2017

I'm not "Russia mongering." In fact, my work argues above all else that we need to solve problems at home that Russia has exploited.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 @wiczipedia · 8 Dec 2017

And if expressing my opinion about the state of politics in my own country is "delegitimizing" democracy instead of contributing to it, we must have a different definition of democracy.

Sergei S. @vsyo · 8 Dec 2017

I believe the talk of the alleged Russian interference delegitimizes Trump and the US election process for many US voters and contributes to further fragmentation of the US society.

The British Parliament recently banned the term "fake news" from being used in official documents & communications. Tweets like the President's, below, which conflate politically inconvenient news stories with lies, are part of the reason why.

> Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump · 7m
> Had a very good conversation with the newly elected President of Brazil, Jair Bolsonaro, who won his race by a substantial margin. We agreed that Brazil and the United States will work closely together on Trade, Military and everything else! Excellent call, wished him congrats!

> Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump · 32m
> There is great anger in our Country caused in part by inaccurate, and even fraudulent, reporting of the news. The Fake News Media, the true Enemy of the People, must stop the open & obvious hostility & report the news accurately & fairly. That will do much to put out the flame...

The President's idea of "bringing all sides together in peace and harmony" seems to center around a monolithic press that encourages neither discussion nor dissent. We need both for a functioning democracy.

Zerkal was pushed aside from the big things which became a reason for her resignation. After rejecting ... job from Ze, she wasn't in the immediate circle or close to Ze. So if her claim is true, a hell lot of people in Kyiv must have known about the freeze.

I disagree that it's dangerous to evaluate areas where Kremlin is exerting tremendous effort, or to re-evaluate them as time goes on, when more lines of effort that previously seemed impossible are exposed. If a narrative resonates why? Shouting "conspiracy" rarely effective.

> Senators visiting Russia say they hope Trump shares their tough message to Putin ABC News abcn.ws/2tJV07J via @ABC

He'll raise it, Putin will deny it. Trump won't push the issue further because he doesn't like confrontation or ruining good vibes and that will be that just like the last time. They're trying to put the issue to bed and make later complaints seem churlish.

I'm actually not sure he'll raise it; it will be on his talking points, but we know he doesn't adhere to them, and he seems convinced of Russia's innocence in the matter. Is he bringing aides/notetakers to this meeting? A modicum of outside accountability is all we can hope for.

Below, this video of Natalia Poklonskaya speaking positively about Zelenskiy is branded with a Zelenskiy team sticker.

I would label this as disinformation. It is deliberately misleading. An uneducated or simply busy viewer might think it's a legitimate Zelenskiy product.

This Tweet is unavailable.

Both campaigns & their supporters should not contribute to the already ripe environment for manipulation in Ukraine right now. It's fine to discuss why Poklonskaya might support Zelenskiy. But this sort of visual miscue is not okay. I'm disappointed by those who RT'd it.

Hard not to be disappointed by coverage of yesterday's FB news; if FB had removed 500+ Russian pages targeting US citizens, it would've been more than a blip.

NATO had planned to hold a leaders meeting in Washington to mark its 70th anniversary in April, akin to the 50-year celebration that was hosted by President Bill Clinton in 1999. But this year's meeting has been downgraded to a foreign ministers gathering, as some diplomats feared that Mr. Trump could use a Washington summit meeting to renew his attacks on the alliance.

Leaders are now scheduled to meet at the end of 2019, but not in Washington.

Accepted protocol dictates that alliance members do not discuss internal business in front of nonmembers. But as is frequently the case, Mr. Trump did not adhere to the established norms, according to several American and European officials who were in the room.

He complained that European governments were not spending enough on the shared costs of defense, leaving the United States to carry an outsize burden. He expressed frustration that European leaders would not, on the spot, pledge to spend more. [illegible] backing Mr. Trump's position, Mr. Stoltenberg pushed allies to increase their spending and praised the United States for leading by example, including by increasing its military spending in Europe. At that, according to one official who was in the room, Mr. Trump whipped his head around and glared at American officials behind him, surprised by Mr. Stoltenberg's remarks and betraying ignorance of his administration's own spending plans.

This is part of the problem with regard to how anything related to Russian interference is covered and discussed. Anyone demanding nuance and rigor is shouted at for downplaying the threat.

Trust people like @RVAwonk who don't try to feed you something definitive or paranoiac.

I have about a dozen tweets with "millions of engagements" It's a meaningless marketing metric. In any event, the coverage of online disinformation is, at present, 99.5% Russia.Russia!Russia! You may think we need to have conversations about domestic influence but we're not!

Just heard this song in a Lyft and... I guess we need country songs to remind men that they should not assault drunk women? 😬😬😬

[Chorus]
Take a drunk girl home
Let her sleep all alone
Leave her keys on the counter your number by the phone
Pick up her life she threw on the floor
Leave the hall lights on walk out and lock the door
That's how she knows the difference between a boy and man
Take a drunk girl home

I had an interesting conversation the other day with an ad exec who advocated for higher buy thresholds, which got me to thinking, is the democratization (or free marketization, I suppose) of digital advertising a good thing? 🧐

Poroshenko's second round ad depicts a choice between Poroshenko and Putin. Zelenskiy's new video (below) talks about a united country choosing between "past and future."

Yevhen, with respect, it doesn't embrace that at all, IMO. It literally says that no matter where you live or what language you speak you are Ukrainian. If it were pushing the division narrative I think this ad would not end with hugging?

👇 I'll be on and off Twitter today, but will include some analysis of Amb Masha Yovanovitch's testimony below.

She begins by laying out her 30 years of diplomatic experience, and explaining why US support for Ukraine is critical-ultimately it is a question of American values.

All coffee shops are worse than my house.

My house:

- perfect temp (80 degrees)
- free coffee
- no other life forms but me
- couch ideal for thought cocooning

Coffee shop:

- other people talking
- not ergonomic
- $5 coffee
- "room temperature" aka 70 degrees aka mild torture

Let me put it this way- if the Zelenskiy team put out a misleading video and used the Poroshenko branding to make it seem like an official product, Poroshenko supporters would be livid, would they not?

> Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia

matter. It is computational propaganda meaning artificially amplified and targeted for a specific purpose — and it dominated political discussions in the United States for days. The #releasethememo campaign came out of nowhere. Its movement from social media to fringe/far-right media to mainstream media so swift that both the speed and the story itself became impossible to ignore. The frenzy of activity spurred lawmakers and the White House to release the Nunes memo, which critics say is a purposeful misrepresentation of classified intelligence meant to discredit the Russia probe

HOW TO BE A WOMAN ONLINE

SURVIVING ABUSE AND HARASSMENT, AND HOW TO FIGHT BACK

I'm especially perplexed by the "allowing refugees to return" part of the deal, particularly given that Assad would continue his rule. It's wishful and negligent thinking. The refugees I met in Greece in 2016 would and could not consider the possibility of return if Assad stayed.

PS- if the Summit will focus on hammering out a Syria deal, wouldn't it be in the administration's best interest to get Trump to, you know, communicate that, rather than continue to undercut US policies about Ukraine and our European troop presence?

"100 trolls" is in reference to the accounts tracked by that particular investigation, "loosely affiliated" is totally accurate for the confirmed info about outreach from Kremlin to the Trump campaign. Why bother nitpicking here? What's the point?

Paul Niland @PaulNiland · 30 Dec 2017

Word!

Nicklas Karlsson I think the majority of the world would be plenty happy if Russia would just remember where its own borders are. It behaves like a has-been-boxer who got brain damage and still calls around his old girlfriends when he finds a bottle of vodka and remembers his glory days

I didn't miss it, and I actually thought that piece made a valid point: there is room for nuance in this debate. It's not all black & white.

Beautiful thread that speaks to why so many of us who love Russia are pleading for a more nuanced view as of late. Not a free pass, not at all. But an understanding that it's a country made up of individual people and not some evil monolith would be a good start.

Furthermore, 8 countries will likely meet the threshold in 2018, with 15 expected to make the cut by 2024, which is by when the Allies agreed to increase spending. Still a long way to go, but “nowhere close” is also “nowhere close” to true.

> Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia

But they clearly had no dog in this fight. Not with these search terms. Nope.

27 The Conspirators searched for and identified computers within the DCCC and DNC networks that stored information related to the 2016 U.S. presidential election. For example, on or about April 15, 2016, the Conspirators searched one hacked DCCC computer for terms that included "hillary," "cruz," and "trump." The Conspirators also copied select DCCC folders, including "Benghazi Investigations." The Conspirators targeted computers containing information

TOS enforcement is a business (not a moral or ethical) decision. For high-profile accounts, TOS enforcement is a balance btwn alienating one group of users or another. Consistent TOS enforcement will only happen if it makes business sense to do so.

Of course it is, but if these companies cared about democracy as much as they say they do, it wouldn't be. Enforcing TOS— and having terms that reflect the challenges of online discourse today— is one of the most effective ways to stem disinfo and hate speech.

Totally agree. Though, considering that the primary goal of social media companies is to please the stock market, they logically can't have democratic values, even if (as I strongly suspect) most of the people in those companies do

Orion Letizi @orionletiz · 6 Aug 2018

Social media companies will have democratic values only if their customers demand it of them — at which point democratic values align with business values. We should demand democratic values — but the only way to do so is to make them the more profitable option.

These sock puppets were but one black hole in an Internet universe replete with inauthenticity. Social media platforms are the modern public square, and yet fake accounts can be created in a matter of seconds, engaging in effective amplification of content within weeks.

They do this without purchasing a single political ad.

Domestic disinformation often escapes the radar of both social media giants and users, contributing to the further deterioration of online discourse that is the new backbone of politics the world over.

EU-Turkey Refugee Deal at risk of unraveling. These #s insane when you consider the 50-60k refugees stuck in Greece. politico.eu/article/eu-tur …

In a sign of reluctance to participate in the arrangement with Turkey, only 13 EU countries have accepted refugees under the program, with the largest number — 1,406 out of 3,919 — going to Germany, according to EU statistics. Meanwhile, just 916 people have been returned to Turkey from Greece under the arrangement. Some initial projections suggested that 150,000 or more people could be resettled under the program.

I picked the babushki as a kind of paradigmatic e.g. of a yearning (which many historians and observers have noted over the years) in the Russia psyche to be seen as a great power. Putin certainly seems to embody this ethos and it has a mass appeal.

Training like this has a proven track record. In Ukraine, IREX, a nongovernmental organization, trained 15,000 people in critical thinking, source evaluation and emotional manipulation. As a result, IREX measured a 29 percent increase in participants who double check the news they consume. Another neighbor of Russia, Finland, has been resistant to Russian influence in part because of its media education program, which begins in childhood.

I think Chris is saying that Julia likely had very little influence over the narrative arc of that piece. Also, Zelensky definitely has not benefited from this scandal - it has brought Ukraine back into Trump & co's field of vision. He has been called an "enemy" by Guiliani

Taking everything else out of the equation, it's still a terrible look.

A journalist writes a piece about someone's possible conflicts of interest without disclosing her own clear conflict of interest with one of the parties she's writing about.

Come on.

1 4 26

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 3 Jun 2019
The piece published the same day the spox vacancy was announced, so at the time what conflict of interest did she have, exactly?

What it really is: a territory and people held hostage. Russia regularly disappears and imprisons journalists and activists there for their work.

Is the in the habit of encouraging travelers to break the law? Because this piece leaves out that by entering Crimea from Russia (which illegally annexed the territory from Ukraine in 2014), travelers would be breaking Ukrainian law and banned from entering Ukraine

The conduct of elections in Russia is nothing like Australia and the Netherlands. For one thing, they don't lure voters to the polls through a "carnival-like atmosphere."

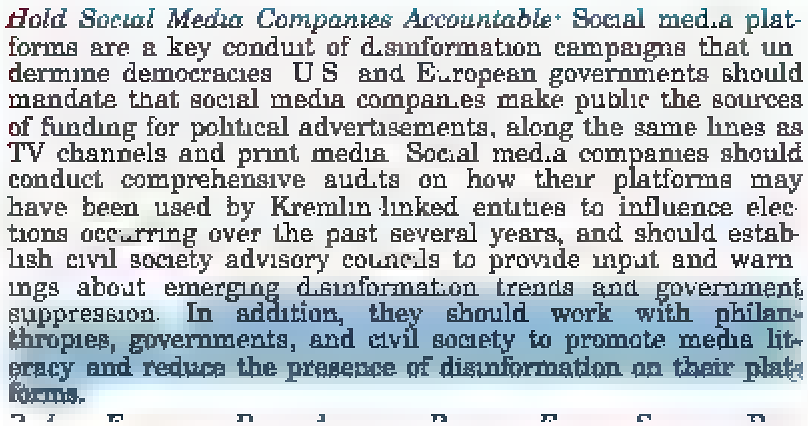
Lots in @SenatorCardin's #RussiaReport, but the increased participation of tech giants in the solution to disinformation is a key recommendation. foreign.senate.gov/imo/media/doc/…



Hold Social Media Companies Accountable: Social media platforms are a key conduit of disinformation campaigns that undermine democracies. U.S. and European governments should mandate that social media companies make public the sources of funding for political advertisements, along the same lines as TV channels and print media. Social media companies should conduct comprehensive audits on how their platforms may have been used by Kremlin-linked entities to influence elections occurring over the past several years, and should establish civil society advisory councils to provide input and warnings about emerging disinformation trends and government suppression. In addition, they should work with philanthropies, governments, and civil society to promote media literacy and reduce the presence of disinformation on their platforms.

A year after the murder of Pavel Sheremet, a gruesome reminder of the danger journalists everywhere face.
washingtonpost.com/news/democracy ...

The murder of Sheremet was the biggest assault on the Ukrainian freedom of the press since the killing of Gongadze in 2000. Gongadze's family is still waiting for justice: His head has never been found. Neither have the people who ordered his murder. Ukraine has always been a dangerous place for journalists. The 2014 revolution and the Russian invasion of the country that followed have only made the situation worse. The world's leading press freedom watchdogs warn of rising violence and intimidation. Even so, our journalists don't usually end up dead. Sheremet's killing was a dramatic departure from the norm. His murderers didn't merely want to assassinate him. By doing it in daylight, in the center of town, with a car bomb, they were clearly intending to send a message to every journalist in the country.

Choosing to ignore a person's humanity and viewing them as part of some secret kabal setting your world on fire is one of the worst things about the Internet. (And, not to bring this back to work, but it's something that bad actors exploit.)

Also, remember that most people's lives are just like yours. That is to say: really boring, for the most part. We're all just trying to get by. The person you're yelling at on Twitter is probably not involved in whatever conspiracy you think they are. They're just doing their job.

All this is a long way of saying I'm going to be engaging a little less. It's not because I don't want to. It's also not because I'm scared of your "theory." It's because if you can't see the humanity in me then I am not going to spend my emotional energy on you.

My timelines are awash with Babchenko remembrances this evening: pictures of him on Maidan, memories from journalists he worked with, activists whose paths he inspired. I did not know him, but I hope it's a long while before I see such mourning again. I fear it won't be.

Below, this video of Natalia Poklonskaya speaking positively about Zelenskiy is branded with a Zelenskiy team sticker

I would label this as disinformation. It is deliberately misleading. An uneducated or simply busy viewer might think it's a legitimate Zelenskiy product

2. That being said, they are still only applying label to stories that are 100% false. But disinfo is rarely as simple as straight fakes.

White's email also included a caution that the push to increase the speed and volume of fact checks should not come at the expense of free speech. This likely refers to Facebook's guidance to fact-checking partners to only focus on stories that are 100% false, and avoid any with shades of grey.

"Increasing our speed and efficacy is important, but it's equally important we do this the right

Treasury announces more sanctions for Russian cyber activity. Good signal, but wonder about effectiveness given that so much of RU cyber operations happens outside of tradition gov/business loci (ie, among criminals)

Those "sanctions" are for comforting the anti-Trump crowd. It's maskirovka, as you would call it. Now it's clear that the real economic wars will be fought with the likes of Germany, Canada, Mexico, and other so called "partners"

2. Disappointed that so much of the info we got is about ad spend. As I told @AliVelshi a few weeks ago, ads are only a small part of the disinformation ecosystem, and we still have no info on organic engagement for this or other takedowns.

We found a total of about 65,000 followers of at least one of the Facebook Pages, which contained posts almost exclusively in French. About 60 followers were located in the US. There was about $4,500 in ad spend from these Pages, and none of the ads ran in the US. We didn't find any ad

Agree that we need to start having many more serious conversations about internal threats to democratic discourse (and have been arguing for this for the past year), but they need not be at the expense of rigorous (and nuanced.) investigations of what Russia accomplished in 2016.

What bothers me is that there's no cohesive effort among policy, intelligence, or defense, to counter the threat. State wouldn't necessarily be a lead agency in this particular situation, but without diplomacy and/or diplomatic goals, there's no strategy to defense this.

With verbal attacks from Western leaders normalizing labeling the press as the "enemy of the people" it's more important than ever to draw attention to events like these.

Would definitely like your sense of the takedown-to-creation ratio. There's a lot of coverage of the former, very little of steps to curb the latter. The dates here suggest the platforms are still fighting yesterday's battles.

Martial law contains provisions that could impede media and civil gatherings but of course big question is whether it will force delay of March elections. Big question is indeed why now? Ukraine didn't introduce martial law in most acute moments of war over last four years

That's not what I would call ad transparency. Either the ads are labeled with a traceable buyer or they're not. There's no in between.

It's a policy that should be rolled out everywhere. Was in London last week, they've only just rolled out the same standards in the UK. IMO should extend beyond political ads too. When you see an ad for shampoo or boots you know who bought it. Not always so for other content

I think one issue I have is that Putin does seem to carry the spirit of his people to a degree that's different than the case in America. E.g the old women who love him as the strong man who can restore Russia's position of power and greatness.

The same as trump carries the spirit of some Americans. I'm not saying every Russian is secretly wishing they could rebel. The situation is just more complex than many make it out to be, and the nation as a whole deserves to be demonized no more than Americans do.

The British Parliament recently banned the term "fake news" from being used in official documents & communications. Tweets like the President's, below, which conflate politically inconvenient news stories with lies, are part of the reason why.

The President's idea of "bringing all sides together in peace and harmony" seems to center around a monolithic press that encourages neither discussion nor dissent. We need both for a functioning democracy.

These are basic details that any NGO receiving USG funds would be required to report (I know, I used to work for one, and I had the great job of being the one who wrote the reports to "demonstrate impact.")

Sure, tech giants are independent, but they should share this information, given the outsize influence they have over our information space, and especially before they claim they're making a good faith effort to solve the problem.

Not going to argue w/ you on Poland. What I know is Poland has been/continues to be target of endless Kremlin sh*t; right now it isn't winning that fight. Neither is anyone else in region, tbh. Until we look holistically at that pattern & how it was achieved, we will keep losing.

Yes, I agree. And one of the reasons PL isn't winning the fight is because it's messages about Kremlin disinfo are rendered impotent because its own gov't is engaged in producing disinfo. It ain't pretty, but it's true, and this Smolensk theory further entrenches that pattern.

Huggies was a large cat to begin with, and then she became quite fat because my siblings used to feed her the leftover milk from their morning cereal. She sometimes purred so loudly while sitting on the couch that my dad yelled at her for obstructing the sound of the TV.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 ✓ Follow

In spite of her quite rotund frame (21 lbs at her heaviest- we sometimes heard her footsteps on the stairs and thought a member of the family was on them), she was an A+ mouser.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 ✓ @wiczipedia · 29 Oct 2018

She would often leave little "gifts" all over the house after her nightly escapades. Once she staked out the Christmas tree all day because she knew a mouse had gone up it.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 ✓ @wiczipedia · 29 Oct 2018

Huggies was five years older than me so treated me like her kitten. She got excited when I came home from school and angry when I went on the top bunk, where I couldn't reach her.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 ✓ @wiczipedia · 29 Oct 2018

At my pre-school Thanksgiving party, I recall my mom being embarassed of me because while most other kids said they were thankful for their families, I said I was thankful for my cat 🤦‍♀️

Huggies died at the ripe old age of 18. I miss her and dream about her sometimes. Cats are great. Pets are great. We do not deserve them. Happy #NationalCatDay

Our point is simple: Putin's people have already spun this. Putin claims credit from the shadows. Another Putin win. Meanwhile, very little changes. Russian journalists & activists & Ukrainian political prisoners & POWs languish in jail. RU still occupies UA. So, what victory?

But the important distinction [illegible] is making is that many see system as totally controlled by RU; in reality more nuanced

Jakub Kalenský @kalensky · 31 Oct 2017

And from the point of view of the organiser of the disinfo campaign, this is totally irrelevant. Disinfo is spread, has impact -> success.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 31 Oct 2017

But it's highly relevant when we think about how we respond! Difference between playing whack-a-mole and building long term resilience

Jakub Kalenský @kalensky · 1 Nov 2017

No, not really. When you identify the aims and means of the aggressor, you simply have to stop him. That's the response

State Department says it "promotes the development of more resilient and democratic societies" — without mentioning democracy at all in the following pages. 🤦‍♀️

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 @wiczipedia · 12 Feb 2018

Lots of focus here on "prosperity" for aid recipients without the underlying recognition that Democracy breeds prosperity
Democratic transitions take decades
Our investments abroad via foreign aid make us more prosperous

Targets Foreign Assistance to Promote Developing Countries' Self-Reliance and Ultimately End their Need for Aid. The Budget reflects the Administration's goal to encourage and advance partner countries' self-reliance in order to decrease dependence on aid and become partners. Working with partners to help them reach their development goals advances common interests and values, strengthens stability in key regions, boosts U.S. economic opportunities, and establishes the conditions for a more secure and prosperous world. The Budget supports new efforts to track countries' development progress from fragility through self-reliance to lasting prosperity. Going forward, agencies would use this information to guide resource decisions, program approaches, incentivize critical reforms, and measure program performance to support partner countries' progress along the development pathway and toward a transition away from the need for aid. The Budget also emphasizes aid approaches that draw in private capital and innovation, foster fair and reciprocal trading relationships, and empower reform-minded governments and people who share the same goals to develop their own capabilities and resources.

Jokes aside, the puppy pics tactic is similar to what RT/Sputnik used (disaster videos) to grow YoutTube following. #disinformation

> The goal of the dog lovers' page was more obscure. But some analysts suggested a possible motive: to build a large following before gradually introducing political content. Without viewing the entire feed from the page, now closed by Facebook, it is impossible to say whether the Russian operators tried such tactics.

By the 3rd quarter of 2015, the ads disproportionately focus on [illegible] which makes sense given the events of that summer, but is especially interesting when you consider that RT gained a ton of notoriety for their coverage of the movement. [illegible]

Also, reminder: when considering the small number of impressions on many ads, don't forget that the number of organic impressions on the pages' various posts (not to mention posts shared manually) is nearly impossible to find out. #RussianAds

Reason #19466393 that simply "hiring 20,000 people to review content" is not enough.

A blanket ban on "things Russian" shows an incredible lack of understanding (a) of what Russia's strategy is and (b) that learning about Russia is not tantamount to supporting the Kremlin.

Taking away the targeting tool doesn't censor. You just can't be as specific about who sees it. You can pay for a broader audience, however.

For my followers who don't follow Ukraine in detail, since the beginning of the war in Donbas, Russia has taken over 100 Ukrainians as political prisoners. Drawing attention to the indignities they've suffered and returning them home has been a huge priority for Kyiv.

It's a "different" government. Different administration. The day the article published was the day the spox vacancy was announced.

Plenty of journalists--including, for example, Samantha Power!--go into government.

It's the "government she was reporting on"

Give me a break. A reporter puts in a job application for a government she was currently reporting on for The NY Times, and you defend that? You don't think this should have been mentioned?

I can't help you if you don't understand the basic facts that:
the story was about the Poroshenko administration and she's working for Zelensky, the story was published before the vacancy was announced.

The biggest blunders of the Zelenskyy presidency so far have related to lack of transparency and communication with media. Hopefully this prisoner exchange fiasco reminds them to return to those principles, which IMO were a backbone of their operation during the campaign.

Good question. They retried the study Oct 2015-Feb 2016 and found similar results.

Results—study 2

To examine the robustness and generalizability of our finding from Study 1 we retest H1 and H2 using the same model specification on the Study 2 data. Results, shown in Table 3, are substantively similar to those found in our original data set. As in our original test of H1, the coefficient for mutual friends is significant in all models, with mutual friends increasing the odds of acceptance by 5.1 times over strangers in the full model comparable to that in Study 1 (column 4): β = .633, $p < .001$). Comparison of the OLS coefficients indicates that the magnitude of the change is also similar. Mutual friends are estimated to increase the probability of acceptance by 22% in Study 1 and 31% in Study 2 (see supplemental Appendix). We also observe a statistically significant coefficient when the snoper follows the snopee exclusively. However, the robustness analysis from Study 1 suggests this is likely subject to selection bias and we do not interpret further.

Interesting. Still, the deep fragmentation and distrust I've observed in the US started in the general election. Hope they test again!

She was applying for a job of a government in which she was reporting on! Not really surprised her defenders would have such crap journalistic standards

It's a different government. Different administration. The day the article published was the day the spox vacancy was announced.

Plenty of journalists (including, for example, Samantha Power!) go into government.

Maybe it's the firehose of nonstop Russia disinfo stories for 2yrs that, when you read past the sensationalist headlines, see had 84 clicks and the cottage industry of NatSec-blob funded insta-experts that makes people cynical.

Adam H. Johnson @adamjohnsonNYC · 22 May 2018

Again 99% of coverage of online manipulation is Russia which is not at all reflective of reality; meanwhile we're deputizing NATO-funded think tanks as arbiters of truth. These aren't two equal sides at work, its a one way one panic

Again, agree that coverage should be a lot more nuanced. Were I in charge, it would be. As it stands, I have to constantly scream into an abyss to sometimes get a nuanced view out there. It gets tiresome.

Russia weaponized ethnic divides in Estonia in 2005-7, culminating in the Bronze Night, so Estonia recognizes that putting people at the heart of their response to disinformation is key, and recognizes its responsibility to do so.

In the US context: we should focus less on telling people why s bad and more on how to get them to realize that themselves.

TL;DR: This has always a people problem. Let's not forget about them as we respond.

Read @anneapplebaum's flawless account of the mood in Ukraine four years after Maidan.

This, in particular, rings true with my experience in Kyiv:

washingtonpost.com/opinions/ukrai …

> "Facebook 'likes' don't count!" was the original call to protest. In subsequent months, some volunteered to fight against the Russian invasion — to raise money for soldiers and equipment. It was a moment one described as "the end of ambivalence." And it explains why, four years later, so many who entered the government, joined the parliament or campaigned to change their country are disappointed.

2/ Disappointed that so much of the info we got is about ad spend. As I told a few weeks ago, ads are only a small part of the disinformation ecosystem, and we still have no info on organic engagement for this or other takedowns

We found a total of about 65,000 followers of at least one of the Facebook Pages, which contained posts almost exclusively in French. About 60 followers were located in the US. There was about $4,500 in ad spend from these Pages, and none of the ads ran in the US. We didn't find any ad

Fakes abound, and @zeteam_official sends out an advisory clarifying what Zelensky accounts are the real deal.

ДО УВАГИ ПРЕДСТАВНИКІВ ЗМІ

На сьогоднішній день у соціальних мережах створено безліч сторінок нібито «Володимира Зеленського». Частина з них створена прихильниками – за що їм безмежна подяка, але і прохання користуватися на них інформацією з офіційних сторінок.

Але найбільша частина фейкових сторінок створена з метою дискредитації Володимира Зеленського і його команди. Як от «твіттер з підписками на Кремль і Медведєва» чи сторінка в фб https://www.facebook.com/welovezelensky/?tn-str=k*F

ЦЕ – ФЕЙКИ!

Офіційна позиція Володимира Зеленського і партії «Слуга народу», а також інформація про діяльність новообраного Президента та представників його команди розміщується на сайті: https://ze2019.com/

This plan is worrying. There are plenty of Ukrainian patriots and excellent public servants who worked in the Poroshenko administration, having joined government after Maidan, full of hope. Zelenskyy and team should engage, not fire them.

A cyber incursion is the intrusion into vote tallies, voter rolls, general poking around in election infrastructure. In a word: hacking. That's different than an online influence operation. Lack of precision in language contributes to lack of understanding and bad policy.

Important to underscore in this news that penetrating and probing ≠ changing tallies. Still extremely disturbing, but we need to be really precise about language (esp in headlines and ledes) so people understand exactly what did and did not happen.

This seems to be a fight over people's credentials. We need to move past it. Yes, we need the voices of serious academics. We also need journalists, diplomats, practitioners, politicians and interested parties. What Russia and Trump are doing is obvious and damaging.

I agree that we need to move past it for the good of our country- the question is why some promote pieces that slander their countrymen as Kremlin agents when we are in the trenches together. I want the same thing Molly wants- a sane Russia policy that puts all this to rest.

This thread by FB's VP for ads that the President just retweeted is really something else.

That FB still seemingly does not understand that pitting Americans against each other is a way to affect elections (and that RU techniques extended beyond just ads) is staggering.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 26 Feb 2019

A cyber incursion is the intrusion into vote tallies, voter rolls, general poking around in election infrastructure. In a word, hacking. That's different than an online influence operation. Lack of precision in language contributes to lack of understanding and bad policy.

This has always been bizarre to me. I'm sure Ukraine's election law doesn't count using state social media accounts for campaigning as abuse of state resources... but it probably should.

Used T-72 salesperson #NotOurTsar @Morts · 1 Apr 2019

Even worse: apparently campaigning on social media on the so-called "day of silence" is technically legal, as the law only mentions internet media outlets, not social media, even though a court may decide otherwise

Some good stuff here- like labeling developing stories as such- but I'm skeptical about "surround[ing] conspiracy-laden videos with accurate information."

People who seek conspiracy theories don't want— and are less likely to trust— accurate information and vetted sources.

but also

NATO had planned to hold a leaders meeting in Washington to mark its 70th anniversary in April, akin to the 50-year celebration that was hosted by President Bill Clinton in 1999. But this year's meeting has been downgraded to a foreign ministers gathering, as some diplomats feared that Mr. Trump could use a Washington summit meeting to renew his attacks on the alliance.

Leaders are now scheduled to meet at the end of 2019, but not in Washington.

Accepted protocol dictates that alliance members do not discuss internal business in front of nonmembers. But as is frequently the case, Mr. Trump did not adhere to [illegible] according to several American and European officials who were in the room.

He complained that European governments were not spending enough on the [illegible] of defense, leaving the United States to carry an outsize burden. He expressed frustration that European leaders would not, on the spot, pledge to spend more. And he appeared [illegible]

[illegible] backing Mr. Trump's position, Mr. Stoltenberg pushed allies to increase their spending and praised the United States for leading by example, including by increasing its military spending in Europe. At that, according to one official who was in the room, Mr. Trump whipped his head around and glared at American officials behind him, surprised by Mr. Stoltenberg's remarks and betraying ignorance of his administration's own spending plans.

A few things worth noting about the controversial Joe Biden/ ... story she contributed to:
1) The lead author was Kenneth Vogel, who has been writing on this subject for a while now.
2) Mendel was a freelancer, meaning she was not employed full-time with NY Times

Matthew Kupfer @Matthew_Kupfer · 4 Jun 2019

3) Mendel didn't set the Biden story's tone because, again, Vogel has been reporting on that for a long time, incl. at Politico
4) Yeah, NY Times said they wouldn't have worked w/ Mendel had they known, but that's an org covering its own ass. Nothing to lose from saying that.

Something I've been thinking about all week:

The creation of a robust anti-disinformation (or any other) policy isn't a zero-sum game.

This is a big problem and will require lots of different efforts to address.

Policymaking benefits from a multitude of heartily discussed views and ideas.

So we should engage in good faith discourse. Disagreement and debate are healthy.

Lunchtime viewing: this chat on disinformation with the lovely folks at the German American Institute in Heidelberg.

Near the end it even includes some tips for how to navigate touchy political discussions at your #Thanksgiving table 🦃 🍁

The update is here at the bottom of this blog post

> June 26th Update: In the coming days we will launch the two sections of the Archive of Ads with Political Content, referenced here. Here are visual examples of what the differentiated archive section will look like, with one section reserved for Promoted News, and the other section for Ads With Political Content Frustrating and tone deaf- complaints weren't just about a differentiated archive but the approval process for news and educational orgs- news and educational content covering politics shouldn't go through the same process as a campaign ad.

This is so meta. Pro-Kremlin Brit ... taunts ... supporters then gets selfie stick broken. Protestors retrieve it for him off ground, say it was "just a provocation"

How can a person speak this bad Russian after living in Odesa/Kyiv for years is beyond me.

Poroshenko's team claims during press conference just now that they encountered "tons of fakes, likely from #Russia," then mentions that a lot of these are narratives in UKR press. They have a "museum of fakes."

Will be following up on this...

[illegible] on Trump/Russia is brilliant [illegible]

But Trump is not always so suspiciously silent. After Russia's presidential election, during which the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe observed "restrictions on fundamental freedoms, a lack of genuine competition" and an overall "coercive" election environment, Trump ignored the advice of key aides and congratulated Putin on his sham of an election win.
